ABOUT

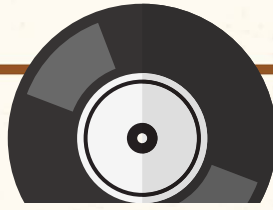

DAVID LEE MURPHY

David Lee Murphy is a country artist known for hits like “Dust on the Bottle,” “Party Crowd,” and “Everything’s Gonna Be Alright.” Beyond his recording career, he is widely respected as one of country music’s most accomplished songwriters, having written songs for artists including Kenny Chesney, Jason Aldean, Luke Bryan, Keith Urban, Eric Church, and Brooks & Dunn.

Raised in Southern Illinois, Murphy developed his style through the influence of outlaw country and southern rock. After moving to Nashville, he built his career as both a performer and songwriter, recording albums that produced songs like “All Lit Up in Love” and “Loco.”

Murphy later shifted his focus to full-time songwriting, earning more than two dozen songwriting awards and penning major hits such as “Big Green Tractor,” “Living in Fast Forward,” and “Are You Gonna Kiss Me or Not.” He returned to recording with the album “No Zip Code,” which featured the No. 1 duet “Everything’s Gonna Be Alright” with Chesney and won him a CMA Award. In 2023, he was inducted into the Nashville Songwriters Hall of Fame.
